Date: March 09th, 2026

To Whom It May Concern,

We are pleased to write this letter of recommendation for Yogesh Verma, who has successfully completed five months as an Android Developer Head Intern at LettrBlack and played a key role in the development of our mobile platform.

Throughout the internship, Yogesh Verma demonstrated exceptional technical capability, strong problem-solving skills, and a high level of responsibility. Based on his performance and reliability, he was entrusted with several critical technical responsibilities that significantly contributed to the development of our product.

During this period, he was responsible for the technical architecture and UI engineering of the Android application. He architected a highly scalable and modular application using Clean Architecture and MVVM, ensuring a maintainable and future-ready code structure. In addition, he engineered a lag-free, responsive, and adaptive user interface using Jetpack Compose, successfully implementing all nine core MLP features of the platform.

He also played an important role in version control and codebase management. By managing the central GitHub repository, establishing efficient branching strategies, conducting code reviews, and resolving complex Git merge conflicts, he ensured the stability and integrity of the main development branch.

Beyond technical implementation, Yogesh Verma demonstrated strong technical leadership and mentorship. He helped coordinate the Android frontend development efforts by planning sprints, assigning tasks, and providing hands-on guidance to fellow developers. His ability to resolve technical blockers and address peer doubts contributed significantly to maintaining steady development progress.

He consistently delivered tasks with quality and attention to detail while maintaining strong collaboration with the team. His dedication and initiative made him an invaluable member of our development team.

We strongly recommend Yogesh Verma for any academic or professional opportunity he seeks.
